

Fossil Free Careers update

People & Planet's Fossil Free Careers campaign has been championed by The Students' Union at UWE and raised with the UWE Careers and Enterprise team.

Following meetings with People & Planet and The Students' Union at UWE, UWE Careers and Enterprise are currently working with their representatives, as well as UWE Bristol's Sustainability Board and academic colleagues, to consider how the themes of the Fossil Free Careers campaign might shape the services we offer and how we help students to make informed choices about their careers.

In addition to this work, UWE Careers and Enterprise are working with other internal stakeholders to review research and business ethics policies at an institution-wide level, which will define how we work with external partners and the nature of our due diligence processes.

As members of the Association of Graduate Careers Advisory Services (AGCAS), and per our commitment to work within the AGCAS Code of Ethics for Career Practitioners, we will always remain impartial, "so that students and graduates have the freedom to develop their own career paths".

We provide accessible, impartial and confidential information, advice, and guidance services so that students can take ownership over their career choices.
