

14. Financial probity

The University requires researchers to be open and honest in all financial and commercial matters relating to research and its funding. In particular researchers are required to:

- Follow the University's Financial Procedures in the development and execution of the research, including requirements to keep clear and accurate financial records (FIN002 Financial Regulations, March 2013).
- Give participants information on how and by whom the research is funded, including any benefits which will accrue to researchers and/or their departments, or to the funders.
- Not offer payments to research participants at a level which could induce research participants to take risks that they would otherwise not take, or to volunteer more frequently than is advisable or against their better interests or judgement.
